Nation Will Produce More 'Green Pastures'

Grass, Farm Mechanization More Vital in Later Years

Prospects are evident that America's farmlands will grow greener in the second half of the 20th century.

Outstanding in farming's past 50 years and bound to play vital parts in the years to come are the new importance of grass and the mechanization of the farm.

According to experts on the subject, grass is soon to rank as a prime contributor to the health and wealth of the United States. Farmers will turn to the use of grass as a real crop in itself, will find that it prevents erosion, builds up the soil, improves the land for crops that are to follow and provides greater profit through more economical feed.

Scenes like this will be more common throughout rural America as farmers turn to grass as a real crop. Here a field forage harvester, one of the newer developments in mechanized farming, chops and blows grass into a truck keeping pace with the tractor.

Because they can now grow more grass with less work, farmers are planting more and more acres in green pastures. They are using more grass as rotation and cover crops and tests have proved to them that grass in rotation with corn and cotton vastly increases yields.

The making of hay and grass silage is the basis of grassland farming. This is a true product of the 20th century. Experiments started about 25 years ago are just now getting widespread acceptance as farmers find that grass silage is second only to grazing in a good livestock program.

Big Mace of House Held Mighty Weapon, But Is Little Used

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Joe Callahan, of Bellevue, Ky., hasn't used it yet, but he is equipped with a mighty powerful weapon. It's the mace, symbol of authority, of the national house of representatives.

Callahan is house sergeant-at-arms. Rules of the house, adopted in 1789, point out that his job is "to maintain order under direction of the speaker" and that the "symbol of his office shall be the mace, which shall be borne by him while enforcing order on the floor." One sergeant, apparently, had gotter into trouble trying to enforce order with no mace.

The Mace would not be very effective to stop a street-corner battle. In fact, some suspect it would be a handicap to Callahan if he had to sprint up the aisle tomorrow to part two battling congressmen. Its power lies in the fact that it is the symbol of authority of the house.

The mace is 46 inches in height and consists chiefly of 13 ebony rods—one for each of the original states—bound together with silver bands and surmounted by a 6-inch silver globe, atop which sits a solid silver eagle, wings spread.

It's the second mace used in the house. The first was burned with the Capitol by British in 1814. This one was made by William Adams, a New York silversmith, in 1841. Cost $400.

Our Mace is a survival of the Roman fasces, which was a bundle of rods wrapped around an ax handle and carried as a symbol of authority. The rods signified authority to flog; the ax, authority to behead. The Romans took fasces to Britain and we got the idea from the house of commons.

Ours serves one other purpose. When the house goes into session each day, one of Callahan's helpers places the mace on a green marble pedestal at the right of the speaker's desk. If the house resolves itself into the committee of the whole, he moves it down to a lower pedestal by the desk of the sergeant at arms. Thus a member, by a glance at the Mace, can tell what kind of session he's in.

If a member gets abusive (that is, beyond the bounds of house rules), the sergeant at arms, at the direction of the speaker, is supposed to go after him with the mace. He simply walks up to the member and holds the mace out toward him. If the member refuses to acknowledge his authority of the house, and shut up, he makes himself subject to discipline by the house, which can be severe.

Program Hater Takes Radio Station off Air

YORK, PA.—This is a new switch on man's turning the tables on radio programs. The hero of this story didn't bother to turn off his set, he simply went out and turned the station off the air when it presented a program he didn't like.

State police said they wouldn't have cared if the 32-year-old York man had turned off the program in the usual way. But Holmes Gibson, they said, took the entire radio station off the air.

Gibson walked five miles in the rain from his home to the transmitting station of WORK and asked Chief Engineer Merle Miller: "Where are the switches to turn the station off?"

Miller told police that Gibson began rushing from switch to switch, turning them off. Miller was right back of him, turning them on again.

The engineer finally gave up the chase, went to a near-by home and returned with a fellow station employee. The two stopped Gibson and got the station back on the air before police arrived.

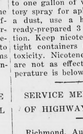
He Loved Teaching

Lesson for August 13, 1950

WHAT WOULD you do if you had a million dollars? Several hundred school teachers were asked that question a few years ago. Seventy-five per cent of them gave the same answer: "I'd retire." They weren't real teachers, they were only trying to get help. The twenty - five per cent were the real teachers. A man named Palmer of Harvard, writes that he would be perfect for doing what—if I could gladly pay Harvard to let me do."



Dr. Foreman

Finished Product

THE REAL thing about teaching is that you are dealing with people, young people, growing people. In every other line of business, however you turn out begins to depreciate almost as soon as it leaves the factory.

It doesn't take long for butter to get rancid, or bread stale. A cold storage egg is a feeble imitation of a fresh one. A car that has changed hands once, even if it has less than 1,000 miles, is already "used" car on its way to the junk-pile.

But the products of the teacher's classroom are by no means "finished" products when they leave it, even if it is a finishing school. If the teacher's work has been done well, the product will go on improving for years, instead of running down.

Three Aims

PROFESSOR EZRA, of Babylon and Jerusalem, was one of history's most famous teachers. We read (Ezra 7:10) the never three aims in Ezra's life that you would expect to find in all good teachers. First of all, he "prepared his heart" to do what he did. The "heart" is the Bible expression for character, for life as a whole. No one can be a truly good teacher who has a bad character.

Now Ezra prepared his heart to do three things. The first was to "seek the law of the Lord." What a teacher teaches may be as important as who his pupils are; and Ezra's "subject" was the law which God had given his people—part of what we now call the Old Testament. Nowadays this is called research, but a simple word for it is just study. A lazy teacher is a poor teacher as, say the lawyers. A good teacher will spend more time studying than any of the pupils do—and will learn more, too. In fact, the best way to learn anything, including the Bible, is to try to teach it for a while.

Second, Ezra prepared his heart to do the law. The old saying, "He who can, does; he who cannot, teaches," is true of poor teachers, not of the good ones. Particularly not true of Bible teachers. The aim of Bible teaching, from Moses' time till now, is always practical. "Truth is in order to goodness," as the Presbyterians say. One who has not tried out the Bible ideals in daily living will never do for a Bible teacher.

And third, Ezra set out to "teach in Israel." Your research scholar may or may not make a good teacher. The good teacher is not bored by teaching as some research-ers are. He loves it. He is happiest at it.

Take Yourself, for Example

NOW LET US see how this comes out in your own home Sunday school. If yours is like most Sunday schools, the main trouble with it is that they can't find enough good teachers, enough people who really want to know about God's word themselves, who live and love to help others know it.

The Rev. H. M. Lewis of Texas has said in his essay, The Dividends of Teaching:

"When you begin to teach you will realize that at last you have found a purpose for your religion . . . Teaching gives a motive, the highest motive, for all acts of religion and for all pursuit of knowledge—For their sakes.' Every Christian has the missionary obligation and is by virtue of his profession of faith, a missionary.—'Go, teach all nations.' Make your particular nation young America and your special opportunity systematic work in the Church school. Once you believe that you must be a teacher because you are a Christian . . . you will have heard your life's call."

RESEARCHERS STUDY MINOR ELEMENTS IN DIETS OF STATE LIVESTOCK

Are livestock on diets lacking in minor elements more likely to suffer from internal parasites?

Dr. W. L. Threlkeld, associate zoologist at the Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station, believes it might be so, and is conducting studies to discover the relationship between minor element deficiencies and the likelihood of parasite infestations.

He explains that research done in England, New Zealand, and some places in the United States, has shown the need of cobalt in the daily diet of sheep and calves. The importance of some of the other minor elements in the diet of animals is not completely understood.

Dr. Threlkeld says that since the physical symptoms of animals suffering from a deficiency or an oversupply of some of the minor elements are similar in many ways to the symptoms of parasitism, it seems probable that there is some relationship.

STANDARD MATERIALS ARE BEST FOR INSECT CONTROL IN GARDENS

A warning to home gardeners against haphazardly "trying out" some of the newer insecticides has been given by J. O. Rowell, insect control specialist at V. P. I.

Rowell says the home gardener should be "extremely cautious" in selecting insecticides. It usually is wise, he says to use the standard materials. There is danger of poisonous residues on vegetables when materials which have not been thoroughly field-tested are used.

He says that if home gardeners try some of the newer insecticides, they should follow very closely the directions of the manufacturer.

Rotenone preparations are still standard for the control of most of the common pests of the home garden. Use a ready-prepared dust mixture containing at least 0.75 per cent of rotenone; or, if you prefer a spray, mix 3 level tablespoonfuls of 5 per cent rotenone powder in one gallon of water. Rotenone leaves no poisonous residue.

Sabadilla dust is recommended for the control of the harlequin cabbage bug, squash bugs, and green stink bug. It is a safe material to use, and is generally available at farm supply stores.

Nicotine dusts or sprays are effective against most of the sucking-type of insects. One tablespoonful of 40 per cent nicotene sulphate to one gallon of water is a satisfactory spray for aphids. If you prefer a dust, use a home-made or a ready-prepared 3 per cent preparation. Keep nicotene dusts in air-tight containers to prevent loss of toxicity. Nicotene dusts and sprays are not as effective when the temperature is below 65 degrees F.

SERVICE MEN HIGH ON LIST OF HIGHWAY FATALITIES

Richmond, Aug. 9.- Alarmed at the high percentage of service men being killed in traffic accidents, Colonel C. W. Woodson, Jr., Superintendent of State Police and Executive Chairman of the Governor's Highway Safety Committee, issued a plea for more cooperation and asked them not to expect immunity to traffic laws simply because they were servicemen.

Col. Woodson stated that he was fully aware of the sacrifices men in uniform were making or would be called upon to make and the frequent necessity of their returning to their bases at a given time. However he pointed out that, in 1949, 31 of the drivers in Virginia's 706 fatal accidents were servicemen and that 10 more died as pedestrians. No statistics were available as to others killed as passengers but loss of life in this category is known to be heavy. This year, he said, is seeing much the same trend.

Military personnel are often attempting to stretch their liberty or leave as long as possible by speeding, he continued, and thus expose themselves and others to its attendant dangers. When apprehended they almost invariably plead ignorance of local laws and expect leniency on this ground and because they are members of the armed forces.

An overseas veteran himself, Col. Woodson stated emphatically that any member of the Department stands ready to render servicemen all assistance possible and practical but dangerous driving simply could not be condoned any more than it can when a private citizen is involved.

With our death toll for the first seven months of the year standing at about 500, Col. Woodson asked all servicemen to consider the thought that they are of no assistance to their country as traffic fatalities.

HOMEMAKERS' ITEMS

Home pasteurization of milk gives the farm family the same protection as families who buy milk from modern pasteurization plants.

And—it's easy to do. A circular, now available from the Agricultural Extension Service at V. P. I., Blacksburg, lists the few simple steps, and tells what equipment is needed in home pasteurization. You may write for a copy.

Chickens from the freezer. You'll find them welcome for company meals, and to have on hand for extra busy days the year around.

Freeze and store excess birds from your flock. Cull the low-producing and the non-laying hens, and put them into the freezer for later use.

A leaflet, "Chicken in the Freezer," now available from the Agricultural Extension Service, V. P. I., Blacksburg, will give you tips on preparation of birds for freezing, and lists a few favorite chicken recipes.
